Meridian & Co. — Strategy & Operations Team

To the team rebuilding how mid-market companies actually make decisions,

I've followed Meridian since your operations practice published the piece on why most "transformation" programs stall at the handoff between strategy and the front line — and that gap is exactly the kind of problem I chased on my operations co-op. So: a firm I follow, a problem I care about, and here's why I'm a fit.

At Pacific Blue Cross, claims were stalling somewhere in a three-line-of-business process nobody owned end-to-end. I dug into where work actually piled up, modelled a routing change that cut average turnaround by ~12%, and — the harder part — walked the VP of Operations through it myself so it would actually get adopted. The dashboard I built to track it replaced a manual spreadsheet that used to eat a full day, and four regional managers now run their weekly review off it.

That's how I work: find where the real problem lives, understand everything around it, then build something grounded that the people doing the work will actually use.

I'd love to bring that to Meridian's operations team — looking forward to a conversation.
